RAW Paste Data SINGLE GOOGLE FLASH FORWARD PROJECT (Flash Forward Project) http://www.flicker.net/flashForwardproject A project aimed at improving YouTube flash forward performance by eliminating the delay between the flash forward and YouTube playback, enabling a smoother playback of Flash forward content while eliminating the jitters present during video playback. This project is designed to benefit all video file formats, using a simple and powerful workflow. This will allow developers to quickly implement video playback with minimal code to get the most performance (without adding significantly to their development time). It also enables the developers to utilize existing Flash forward libraries in order to utilize the best flash forward support features from their respective libraries while also offering a simple and fast workflow. The end result is a tool which is highly responsive to Flash forward code, and can utilize the fastest, most flash forward-friendly Flash forward capabilities from your libraries, without requiring a significant programming effort to integrate your specific libraries. All developers will also notice an improvement in the speed of playback to maximize user experience. The goal with the project - is for developers to create highly responsive and optimized flash forward applications for every video format. While there is no requirement for each video format to support Flash forward libraries, there is a requirement for the videos to be flash forward-friendly and easy to use. The goal of the project - is for users to enjoy high quality video, no matter what kind of video format they are using. The developers will continue to update this project, as new features/improvements are added to improve the speed and performance/convenience of this project. For a complete list of features and improvements see the Flash forward API Specification.
